

THANKS TO MODERN TECHNOLOGY*

... I can also  wish you a happy anniversary for next year at this time since I am not as reliable as the Xerox corporation and have waited till the day before to get creatively inspired which means the US mail will miss the correct receive delivery date by some significant fraction of a week. Anyway it seemed like a good occasion to just say "Hi". It's too bad circumstances have prevented us from knowing each other.

I don't know the groom and I hardly know the bride but as long as you know each other and know it's right between you you've got something more valuable than any wish I could wish you.

We're separated by more than just distance or time, the midwest Jantzens and us East Coasters. I remember you as a pretty little girl, Lisa, and you must be quite a young woman now. Although we are strangers to each other, an important occasion like this offers me the opportunity to show I haven't forgotten that little girl.
Good luck to you both. In these times you'll need some.
