What Are Quick Check Questions?

Description

Each topic in the online Rephactor textbook contains a small set of Quick Check questions at the end. These are multiple-choice, true-false, and matching questions.

How they are used for grading

Answering the Quick Check questions for the assigned topic reading is part of your overall grade in the course. Since you get immediate feedback, and can change your answer, there's no reason not to get them all correct. Of course, you should try to get them right the first time. Wrong answers are counted and can factor into the grade.

How they work

The status of each Quick Check set is shown in the upper right corner. The following example shows that 2 out of the 5 questions in this set currently have correct answers. The red number (4) indicates how many wrong answers have been given in this set, whether those questions were eventually answered correctly or not.

The goal is to get all of the questions correct (5/5) while keeping the red number as low as possible. Important: the red number only goes up – it doesn’t come back down when you get the question right.

Note: the feedback is immediate – make sure you only click on what you think the correct answer is.

Quick Checks will be examined weekly. As long as you eventually get the correct answer for all questions without too many incorrect answers along the way, you will get full credit for the reading. If there appears to be a trend toward too many incorrect answers, perhaps indicating randomly clicking around until the correct answer is found, a formula will be created to more precisely account for correct and incorrect answers. Probably, that won’t be necessary.
